RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 40 pages. OCLC Number: (OCOlc)48244213 Subject: Fetus -- Legal status, laws, etc. -- United States. Excerpt: . . . e to discuss a bit how California has dealt with this issue and what might have been learned from that experience. In 1969, a man named Robert Keeler savagely and cowardly attacked his divorced wife, Teresa, in Amador County. That is about 100 miles from my home in San Francisco. Teresa Keeler was 7 months pregnant. Vowing to kill her unborn child, Robert Keeler stomped repeatedly on Teresas stomach, fracturing the head of the unborn child. The California Supreme Court then ruled that Robert Keelers killing of Teresas unborn child was not murder because under State law murder was the unlawful killing of a human being and a fetus was not a human being. Soon after, rightly outraged at Keelers escape from justice, the California Legislature amended the California murder statute to permit murder prosecutions for killing a fetus. That was 3 years before Roe v. Wade. It was also similar to what the proposed bill does. It gives the fetus an independent status. Both California law and the proposed bill, as I understand it, permit a prosecutor to bring two counts against a defendant who attacks a woman, killing her unborn child, one for assault and one for murder. Twenty-two years after Keeler attacked his ex-wife, a San Diego resident named Maria Flores was cashing a check when a stranger, Robert Davis, approached her, pulled a gun and demanded money. Clutching her 20-month-old son, Flores refused to hand over her money. Davis shot her in the chest. While Flores survived the shooting, her almost 6-month-old unborn child did not. He was stillborn. Under Californias murder statute, Davis was...
