The oral instruction in Geography, History, and Science cannot be said to be universally successful. Many classes are far too large for oral work, and the back rows never answer. The extinction of the fixed examination has nowhere proved a more merciful deliverance than in needlework, the instruction in which has been better organised; but the omission of marking from the Needlework Syllabus is to be deprecated. But in the matter of music I have to regret the loss of the examination day. Exercises in voice-production might profitably be added everywhere. Mr. Curry says: -- Bath. Our present system of inspection has certainly made school life more pleasant for everyone concerned. Though the annual examination of former days showed that schools varied in merit, the same variety is still equally clear. It may safely be said that the teachers in our elementary schools discharge their duties in a conscientious manner, but from no fault of their own many have had very limited opportunities of seeing good methods of teaching in operation, and Inspectors have helped them to improve many weak points in their work. Oral lessons do not clash as much as formerly; there is a more rational sequence of lessons on the Time Table; simultaneous and disorderly answering has almost disappeared, and the time is better divided among the various...
