Not illustrated. 1886 Excerpt: .what they have to tell, and has laughed at them, or has received their complaint as a tissue of nonsense, or has sneered at their want of resolution: but, if the critic only knew what a glass of wine did; how it raised the languid powers, gave confidence to the wavering mind; did, for a time, make glad the heart; the critic would be less severe and more reasonable. The statement of the line of argument thus supplied is the natural interpretation of all the difficulty. It explains that there are two classes of reasoners, each standing on his or her own ground, and deciding on his or her own conceptions. There are two sets of witnesses. Why? The answer is as simple as it is direct and obvious. There are two sets of witnesses, because there are two sets of people: one that has become...
