Under ordinary circumstances the lower part of the abdomen and pelvis is simply sponged out carefully, the torn surfaces dusted with aristol and the wound closed. I prefer to sew the cut margins of the peritoneum together with a continuous suture of fine catgut, dust the wound with iodoform or aristol and close the cut in the skin, fat and rectus muscle note.--Great care must be exercised in dissecting out the affected structures in such cases as there is great danger of marine into the intestine in front and above, through the rectum behind and into the bladder below. Sometimes the adhesions are very dense; this is invariably the case if there have been repeated attacks of pelvic peritonitis 1 have known the adhesions to be so firm, so extended and so smooth that the uneducated finger would never detect...
